HER WORRIED LOOK.

Not a Brutal Husband, but a Bag of High-Priced Eggs.

It was 5 o'clock in the afternoon and the outboard street car was crowded. The aisle was jammed with women—all standing. Three women near the door were talking in loud tones, too loud to be discreet, and it soon became known to several others near that they were discussing the appearance of a lady holding to a strap a little farther up the aisle. "Yes, she certainly does seem worried," one lady was saying. "She must be having trouble and lots of it." "And to think that she has been married only a year, poor thing," was the sympathetic tribute paid by another of the trio. Then the third said: "Well, I don't know but it serves her right. You remember we all told her that man was a brute, and that she would regret it if she married him." Didn't we, though, didn't we," said the first speaker, triumphantly. "We told her and she told us to mind our own business. I don't care a bit if her face does look drawn and haggard." "It wouldn't surprise me to know that her husband treats her brutally," said another. "I—avenue!" shouted the conductor from the platform. "Oh, here is where we get off," said one of the gossiping trio. "I was so absorbed that I nearly forgot." As they left, the car it was observed that the woman with the supposed brutal husband was also getting off, and then there they all met. "My," said the woman talked about, "I am glad it is over with." "Why, how-do, how-do, how-do," said the three. "You are so glad what is over with?" they asked, expecting to hear a confession of her unhappy married state. "I have a dozen eggs in this bag," replied the woman with the supposed brutal husband, "and I had to stand and that fat woman in front of me was continually staggering back against me, and I was simply tortured with fear that she would break the eggs, and they are thirty cents a dozen, too!" "Oh!" was all the trio could say.—Baltimore News.

STAGE TRAGEDY RECALLED.

Reasons That Impelled the Sad Suicide of Walter Montgomery.

Clement Scott, the dramatic critic, is in a reminiscent mood. In the Free Lance—more than thirty years after the event—he throws light on an old and mysterious tragedy of the stage. In September, 1871, London was startled to hear that Walter Montgomery had committed suicide two days after his marriage at St. George's, Hanover Square, on August 30, 1871. The act was incomprehensible to all Montgomery's friends. It has now been explained. It appears that when Walter Montgomery was "starring" in Australia he fell in love with a charming girl, who was an heiress. He proposed to her, was accepted, but the marriage was strongly opposed by the father of the fiancée. The actor, piqued, disappointed and apparently heart-broken, sailed from Australia to England. On board ship he was fascinated by another lady, and he married her directly after the ship arrived at home. A few hours after the marriage Walter Montgomery received a letter from the father of the Australian girl, saying that he had renounced, that his daughter was dying of a broken heart, and that he was to hurry back to Australia to claim his bride and her fortune. Remorse, disappointment, despair affected the handsome actor's brain, and he rushed up to his room and put a bullet through his temple.

Feeling the Clerk.

Mr Joseph B. Long of Philadelphia takes particular delight in a little joke which he perpetrates upon every hotel clerk he meets. Yesterday he sprung it at the National. Walking up to the office counter in the most innocent manner imaginable, he asked: "Where do I live?" The clerk glanced at him, and perceiving that he meant the number of his room, turned the register and began scanning the closely-filled page. "Why—er—er, you—er belong in room number—" "Number 32?" interrupted Mr. Long, picking out a room number on the register opposite the name of a man named Jones. "Yes, 32; that's it," said the clerk suddenly. "You're Mr. Jones of New York." "You are simply great at remembering names and faces," remarked Mr. Long. "Yes, I never forgot one," replied the clerk. "Good," rejoined Mr. Long; "all the clerks say that. I'm Mr. Long of Philadelphia; my room is 47. Thanks for the key." "I'll remember you next time all right," remarked the clerk as Mr. Long walked away laughing.—Washington Post.

The Red Hunting Coat.

It is said that one of the early Henrys was so enamored with the sport of fox-hunting as to obtain it to be a royal sport, and the red coat was worn in consequence. This, however, has been pointed at as absurd, as in those days scarlet was not a royal livery at all. One thing there can be no doubt about, and that is the scarlet coat is very popular for those who hunt regularly. And it must be confessed that it adds picturesqueness to the scene. The question of color seems to be very much a matter of taste; it is looked upon as an indication of social position. In the abstract anyone can don the pink, if so desired, but it is considered out of taste for anyone to adopt that color if he does not liberally subscribe to the hunt fund. The black coat is considered to come next in social position, and the ordinary multi-colored garment for those whose subscription is very small indeed.

AN UNGRACIOUS BRIDE.

Unpleasant Way in Which She Started Her Married Life.

"Yes," said a young man recently, "I saw one bride this fall start her married life all wrong, and if her conduct was as great a shock to her husband's ideas of womanly feeling as it was to mine I feel sorry for him. She was going to have a church wedding, a bridal pageant of beauty and elegance, and as a small accessory an awning was to be erected from the curb to the church entrance. It chanced that immediately following this wedding the son of a modest tradesman in the vicinity was to lead his bride to the same altar. Hearing of it, the fashionable girl called on this young man and suggested that, as he and his bride were to have the use of her awning, it might be as well for him to share the expense of it. This he declined to do, on the ground that his wedding was of so unostentatious a nature as to need no awning, and it certainly had not occurred to him to order one. After some argument, in which neither side yielded, the party separated with the sweet girl bride-to-be intimating that if he did not pay in part for the awning he should not profit by it. The wedding day dawned with crowded church, fragrant flowers, glimmering candles, and all the solemn yet joyful accompaniments of the sacrament of marriage. The fashionable wedding was duly solemnized, and as the tearful bride descended the steps of the sanctuary the modest equipage of the tradesman's son drew up before the edifice. The white-gowned bride, leaving behind her all the sunny memories of maidenhood, standing on the happy threshold of married life, stepped quickly to her carriage, and, then turning, with her own hand gave the signal to waiting workmen to remove the awning. The second bride and groom advanced to the church to the discordant ripping asunder of canvas—not half as discordant, however, as the jangling discords that rang through the hearts of the spectators at such an exhibition of evil passion at such a time."—Baltimore Sun.

THE DOG'S GRAVEYARD.

Canine Pets Buried in Expensive Style in Edinburgh.

Edinburgh, Scotland, boasts of the only graveyard where canine pets are regularly interred and their last resting places marked with gravestones. This old cemetery lies on the northern face of the Castle Rock, below St. Margaret's Chapel, in the famous old castle of Edinburgh. It was founded a long time ago for the exclusive use of dogs who have been pets of the various regiments which have been quartered at the castle. Almost two score dogs have been buried in it, and the grave of each one is marked; some with stones as large as are used for human beings, and others merely tiny monuments. The cemetery is enclosed by a low wall of stone, and is always pointed out to visitors as the only one of its kind in the world. Not a little interest attaches to the epitaphs which the stones bear. One is inscribed with the grimly humorous line, "Let Sleeping Dogs Lie," while the merits of another animal are borne testimony to by the statement that "He Never Bit a Friend." Almost every British regiment has with it, whether in garrison or on field, a dog who is the pet and mascot of the organization, and to whom the soldiers become sincerely attached. It was because they did not like to have their pets forgotten when they passed away that they established this little cemetery.

The White House Livery.

A cockade of red, white and blue is a noticeable feature of the new White House livery, although the national colors are in evidence throughout the costume in which the president's coachman and footman appeared a few weeks ago. The coats and the trousers are of heavy dark blue vicuna, the best quality of goods obtainable being used. The outer seams of the trousers are bound with a white cord. The long paddock driving coat, which terminates midway between knee and ankle, is of "military" cut and has a snug waist and broad square shoulders. The skirt has a decided flare. Down the front from the tight fitting, narrow collar to the waist line run parallel lines of silver buttons. Underneath the coat is worn a long-sleeved tunic of the same material as the other garments, and fastened in front by a single row of silver buttons. Mrs. Roosevelt selected the material and the pattern for the livery. The order was given to a fashionable New York livery tailor.—American Tailor and Cutter.

The Conversation of Kings.

One has a general idea that because a man is a king that he is not a man, but oftentimes when the conversation of crowned heads is made public it is found to be an expression of ideas that are far from kingly. This certainly was the case in the following: The king of Portugal is forbidden by his physicians to eat much meat. He calmly disobeys the doctors, however, and is especially fond of beef, of which he eats great quantities. When he visited England a few years ago he was stopping at Lord Salisbury's country seat, where also King Edward was a guest. One day at dinner King Carlos was asked what had impressed him most during his short stay in England. He replied, thoughtfully, "Well, I think English roast beef is very delightful." "Oh," laughed King Edward, "surely something else has impressed you as well?" "Ah," was the reply, "of course the English boiled beef is also delightful."

A WALL STREET CURIOUSITY.

Two Rich Lindowners Curiously Divide Up Valuable Lots.

When joint owners of real estate wish to effect a division of their holdings the property usually is sold, each owner taking his respective share of the proceeds. But down on Wall street a lot is being partitioned much after the manner in which two boys would "whack up" a piece of pipe or a cent's worth of candy. No. 56 Wall street adjoins the Central Trust Company building, is owned by George Peabody Wetmore, and 60 Wall street by Mrs. Edith C. Iselin. The building in between these two, No. 58, is the property of Mr. Wetmore and Mrs. Iselin jointly. Some time ago Mr. Wetmore decided that his building might yield better returns if it were overhauled and a more attractive front put in. It also occurred to him how much better his remodeled structure would look with a frontage of thirty-seven feet instead of twenty-five. He owned a half interest in the adjoining lot, and why should he not have it? Mrs. Iselin offered no objection, and passers-by on Wall street recently have been somewhat mystified by the building of a substantial brick wall along what seemed to be the center of a lot. The new wall when completed will be the easterly side of Mr. Wetmore's new building. Mrs. Iselin now has a vacant lot about twelve feet wide on her hands—a pretty valuable piece of ground to be idle in such a location, says the New York Times, but hardly available for any purpose unless she shall decide to remodel her building and take in the half-lot just as Mr. Wetmore is doing.

THE AMERICAN GIRL.

A Bright Glimpse at Her From Ellen Terry's View.

There is nothing theatrical about Ellen Terry's indorsement of the American girl, as uttered a few days ago in Chicago, says a writer in the New York World. Miss Terry was eating a shrimp salad at the Noonday restaurant of the Kilo Association, where working girls of the city take their daily luncheon in a sort of mutual-helpfulness plan. "No wonder," said the great actress, "you American girls are independent and successful. You are far ahead of English girls in enterprise and business." A similar tribute from a representative of the foreign stage was offered not long ago. Sarah Bernhardt said to an interviewer in Brussels: "I have found the American women much superior to our women. The American girl is elegant and pretty. She marries as late as possible, which is explained by the fact that she enjoys absolute liberty. The young girl in Europe has only one aim, and that is to get married in order to escape from the thraldom of the family. On the other hand, the American girl postpones marriage because, while she is single she avoids the inevitable burden of matrimony." The American girl is a treasure not without appreciation in her own land. We may feel that in the joy of her independence she occasionally delays unduly the establishment of a new home in this land of homes. Yet we know that when at last she yields to the urgings of "the right man" there is none to assume a matron's duties more gracefully and well. Long enjoyment of freedom has then taught her dignity.

The Best Works.

A story is told of one of the old-time pillars of a New England church who held out firmly for a long time against the innovation of an organ, but when he finally yielded, did so without reserve. From violent opposition he became the most strenuous of all the congregation as to the fitness of the instrument to be purchased. "I don't mean you aren't very consistent," said one economical brother, "here a month ago you were so harsh enough about organ you go to advocating getting the best that's to be had here!" said the deacon, "we're going to worship the machinery, I don't want round with any second-hand gear!"—Youth's Companion.

Now he looks like an old mule hauling a load. See if you can put your finger on the Nose and the Eyes and the Mouth. Turn down the page and you come to a Pretty Picture of Like. The baby is Edith. State Censor of the Assemblyman James T. Troy, who has been in labor from Remonstrance sessions past, says in the New York World that to unload a dramatic bill that practically creates the office of state censor of the drama. The purpose is to taboo anything immoral. Assemblyman Ahearn contends that America gives more latitude to immoral drama than any other country. His bill will provide for the appointment of a state commission and state centralization in the matter of license issuance.
